We want to have a small-scale computer lab of around 10-12 computers, a first step in our goal to have all students be technologically literate with a computer by the time they graduate ("literacy" will be dictated by a test given by the Ministerio de Trabajo de Paraguay).

As a Peace Corps volunteer with a Computer Science degree, I'd plan to personally spearhead at least 2 clubs for students that already have a working familiarity with computers:

One in which I teach python, culminating in each student create their own semi-complex program from scratch

One in which I teach the basics of arduino, culminating in groups of students creating small electronics projects using an array of sensors I'll provide (I brought a few trinkets from the U.S.)
